"Come sir," interrupted the officer, "I can allow you no more time."

I will go with you immediately, the soone "Well, dr, if you are willing to proceed peac ably with us, I shall not us a force, I should be borry to do the latter."

Beleen made no reply, but turned toward Julia, the was still igeonsible.

Without delguing to speak to the others, and with dark and lowering brow, he followed his Virginia had sunk terror stricken mpen a sent in one of the deep and shade! algoves of the room: Mr. and Mrs. Remsen looked on bewildered and smazed, the neighbors were affrighted and speechless, and gradually left the house, betaking themselves to their carriages, in waiting at the door. Mrs. Remsen, after she had self of Julis, who still lay insufmate where the Colonel had placed her, and directed Harry who with the farmer and Mr. Brown, were the only ones who understood the matter, to obtain some restoratives; he hastened upon his errand and soon returned with the desired articles. It was some time buf re she was a watened to consciousness, and then instantly realizing how affairs stood, her eye falling on Brown, she beckened him to her side, and wh spered.

"Is he secured? Is he a pelsoner?" "On his way to the guard house," rep'ied Virginia at this moment came forth from the alcove, and joining Harry in the shadow of the heavy custains, inquired in tremulous tones, the meaning of what had so lately transpired. He rooing to reasons for concealment, replied, that Nelson Breatherd was the supposed murderer of his late brother, George, and that he had been betrayed, and consequently errested. "And why at this hour, when on the eve o his marriege?"

"Twas deemed better thus; but Virginia, drive this unpleasant subject from your mind." "Tis not so easi'y done, es you may imagian," she reglied. "farry, were you aware of tals, when you can loved me against him the other
